But it does not advocate nor commend prohibitory laws, because it does not believe it possible to enforce them. In Oregon restriction can be enforced; prohibition cannot. For total abstinence public sen-timent is not strong enough. But reinforce it by the large number who insist on high license, closing on Bundays, and other measures of restriction, and there will be a body of public opinion sufficiently strong to do away at once with the causes which produce more than half the evils that flow from the sale and consumption of intoxicating drinks. Why reject an attainable in striving for an ideal good? This is the present position of THE Oneconian on the liquor question. If will go further, who ever it is able to see that actual good will be the result. This, it conceives, is "consistency" (to suploy a word it detests), in the highest degree.

Many journals come to our table leaded with praises of congress for the great things it has done for the good of the country. We should indee tor the good of the country.
